Guinness West Indies Porter (6.0%)

Ireland

At Guinness we believe that some of the finest exploits begin with beer — and some of the finest beers begin with exploits. In 1801, Guinness brewers took on the challenge of creating a porter that could keep its quality in a ship's hold during a 4-5 week voyage into tropical climes. The idea was a beer with higher hops and more gravity that was as drinkable as the Guinness town porter favoured in Dublin pubs. Not only did the new porter survive the journey, but it turned out to be a remarkable beer in its own right.
